SOWING AND ESTABLISHING WHITE CLOVER

Courtesy of Mark O'Sullivan Teagasc

Benefits of White Clover

- Clover can fix atmospheric nitrogen allowing you to reduce your fertiliser inputs.
- Feed Value - Livestock find white clover very palatable, which contributes to body condition and milk out-put.
- Improved soil structure.

Before Establishing

- It's essential that the selected paddock is at an optimum level for pH, P and K.
- Weed management after establishment is very difficult so there should be a low weed burden on that paddock prior to sowing
- Large leaf clover varieties are more suited to silage fields while medium leaf varieties are best suited for grazing. Use varieties that are from the recommended list.

Establishing

- Optimum sowing dates are between mid-April and mid-June.
- For direct reseeding, prepare a fine firm seedbed and sow to a depth of 12-14cm.

- Don't sow clover seed too deep. Include clover at a rate of 1-2kg/acre.
- Ensure good seed contact by rolling.
- For establishment of clover no chemical Nitrogen should be applied to the seed bed as you don't want to shade out the clover seedlings with grass.

Managing Post Establishment

- Use a Clover safe post emergence spray to kill any weeds.
- Light penetration at the base of the sward is essential for good clover establishment.
- To maximise this light at the base, graze every 18-20 days.
- Once the clover is established reduce the rate of Nitrogen spread from May-August. This will give clover the best opportunity to compete with the grass and fix atmospheric Nitrogen.

Reducing Bloat Risk

- For animals accustomed to clover swards bloat is not usually an issue.
- Introduce animals gradually to clover swards. The use of a strip wire is essential if going from paddocks of low clover to a paddock with lots of clover.
- Target grazing the higher clover sward in dry weather or use bloat oil in the water (25ml/LU/Day)
